In 1924 two young men committed a kidnapping and murder that rocked the city and the country. Nathan Leopold and Richard Loeb were wealthy, intelligent, and from prominent families. Their victim, 14-year-old Bobbie Franks, was Nathan’s cousin. Why would these young men commit such a horrific act? The answer fueled hundreds of newspaper stories, and became the center of their defense by Clarence Darrow. Even 95 years later people are still puzzled and fascinated by what became known as the “Crime of the Century.” Copies of these titles will be available at the Circulation Desk in addition to supplementary materials. Come join us for coffee and light refreshments.

Meetings held 2nd Saturday in even numbered months. Next meeting is February 8.
